THE LAW OR THE LEAGUE ?

If the present Government succeed in living out anything approaching the allotted span of Ministerial existence, says the "Pall Mall Gazetta", they ought to succeed in leaving behind them a remarkable collection of what "Mr. Punch" has described as "things one would rather not have said." The pious founder and most genfrous benefactor of that Museum is, of course, the Primes Minister. Times was when the "blasing indiscretions" of the late Lord Salisbury used occasionally to astonish both his friends and his fose. But Lord Salisbury was always wise, and often witty; and, if he was nomewhat given to thinking, aloud, he never spoke without thinking. Not so our own good Bir Henry. "Methods of barbarian" and "squalid bonds are fair specimens of the sort of thing which is supporters periodically find themselves compelled to explain away, as they have lately tried to do with his charge of blank refusal of applications to landlords for small holdings. compelled to explain away, as they have lately tried to do with his charge of blank refusal of applications to landlerds for small holdings, and as they were trying to do yesterday, and the day before, in the Lerds with regard to the "yery satisfactory" state of Ireland. And, as with the Premier, so with other members the Government-and party. Now there is some delicate personal allusion, or pices more picturesque than polite phraseology by the Under-Secretary for the Golonies: anon we have Mr. Birrell and his "carrior crows." Yesterday it was the turn of Lord Denman, who, in an evil hour, had been put up to answer Lord Londonderry, and thought proper to excluse the offence of cattle-driving as not being in the eyes of the Government, "a crime of a very serious autora." We venture to any that this is a specimen well worthy of a glass oasg all to itself in the Memorial Museum of the Ministry of All the Mistakes. It is quite the most mischievous—and gratuitously mischievous—this read the Affirities. glass case all to itself in the Memoria Museum of the Ministry of All the Mistakes. It is quite the most mischievous—and gratuitously mischievous—thing said by a Minister, or on the Ministerial behalf, since "methods of barbarism," bectuse, like that classic phrase, it will encourage the fore, and discourage the friends, of Eugland, the former of whom, in this case, are not the Bears, but the 'disloyal and lawless Irishry. By this time, as we do not doubt, every newspaper in Irishard, Nationalist and Unionist, is spreading far and, wide the news that the Government do not consider the nestion which is making life intolerable on nearly two hundred and fifty grazing farms to a "actine of a very serious nature." Well, everything is relative: cattle-during is not murder, or arson, or cattle-basing—though the ruin of two whole classes of the King's subjects, the landlords who have lawfully taken it. To say that organized and violent interference with the rights of these men is not no rime of a serious nature." We have lawfully taken it. To say that organized and violent interference with the rights of these men is not intrinsication of anarchy.

It goes, of course, without saying that the Government had to explain away Lord Deman : no amount of tenderness for the cattle drivers could blind either Lord Crew or Lord Ripon to the necessity of declaring that Ministers were firmly determined to put down disorder. The law, said Lord Ripon, will be maintained without fear or favour. We hope it will; but, so far, it has not been sufficiently efficacious to prevent, Lord Lansdowne state, the surrender of thirty farms in Roccommon within the past few weeks. There is, however, an aspect of the Irish situation which lawscaped the surrender of thirty farms in Roccommon within the past few weeks. #### THE COTTON INDUSTRY.

Cotton. By C. W. Burkett and C. H. Poe. (A. Constable and Co. 8s. 6d. net.)—This typically American work contains a useful and, even to the general resider, an "fateresting account of the cotton industry, from the atandpoint of the Southern States. The authors claim, in a somewhat dithyrambic introduction, that cotton is the most important of the world's crops, and that it would be impossible to disagreement of the products. That is a slight edge geration, became the European world had to get on without cotton for a good many centaries, and it is only within the last hundred paid fifty years that its use has reached any considerable degree of importance. At present, though the base of cotton in this country has not yet reached head marican proportions named by Messra-Burkett and Poe in their introduction, where they claim that it enters into nearly every set of life, it farmistics one of our greatest industries, and a cotton families would have the most disastrous results for Lancashire, and, indeed, for England in general. The book now before us contains a full account of the various processes adopted in the growth, asle, and manufacture of cotton in the United States, and zeens with statistics of all kinds, which are quarantaced by the position of one of the authors as Professor of Agriculture at a well-known Technical College. It is intended mainly for the expert, but is written in a popular cocasionally too popular—style, and may be akimmed with interest by the reader who desires to know the histery of cotton, from the plantation to the factory, and the prospects of its future growth and exploitation.

Referring to our special cable of the count. "Al Watan" says :—
Our last article on this subject has beer quoted and discussed by the European Press Unfortenately the discussion was in the wrong direction-owing to a mistake of the London paper which published a precise of our article wired by its Cairo correspondent. In the precise "The Globe" told the world that we ha applied for a British Protectorate thus necessitating enquiry into the source and effect our quoted article and a subsequent outburn of heat and anger in the local National Prewith its concomitants of misrepresentation are abuse. "Al Minbar" and other misinformed papers were full yesterday of deprecations and insimations before waiting to ascertain the facts. We have nothing new to say on the subject of the Veiled Protectorate beyond the fact that an error in transmission has led to a misunderstanding of our views. In the article which gave rise to this discussion we repeatedly and plainly said that we do not invite England to swallow our independence, and that we prefer a native Government, boping that England will help us to gain our independence one day. All we desired and prayed for was a shift from the ontenable position of temporary occupation which has been held too long, an end to the uncertainty of this unofficial and undecided form of Government which helps in creating trouble and gives a wide scope for seditious agitation. We explained that under the present circumstances England had no right to remain in Egypt, that she is here in the timid and hesitating manner of the guest who has overstayed his welcone. Unless the Veiled Protectorate was put on a more permanent footing, agitation will become put on a more permanent footing, agitation we go on and the work of Government will become dangerous or perhaps inpossible. This was the essence of our wrongly quoted article which had Mr. Diegy's interview with the Khedives its raison d'être. In that interview hillings gave expression to his views on the Cocupation and Protectorate and opened if door for public comments on the subject. We work that an erroneous transmission of or wadersfanding, but

A NEW WORK UPON ANCIENT EGYPTIAN RELIGION.

By Joseph Offont.

The first series of leatures delivered at the College of France, in Paris, upon the foundation bequeathed for the purpuse by M. Michouis, was by M. Edward Naville, the well known Swiss Egyptologies, and director now for some years of the exploration at Deired-Bahari. It is fortunate for science that the opportunity of this course of lectures induced Mr. Naville to set forth what his knowledge enable to tell of the religion of the ancient Egyptians. It is now nearly 50 years since he published at translation of the "80d ra Litany" and of the "Myth of Horus," and he is the greatest living authority upon the "80ok for the Dead" and all he has to say about Egyptian culture, worship and theology is the excellent living authority upon the "81d he was a summer of the "Myth of Horus," and he is the Dead" and all he has to say about Egyptian culture, worship and theology is the excellent living authority upon the "81d he was a summer of the "Myth of Horus," by M. Ernest Leroux of Paris will be carefully studied.

M. Naville explains, in the preface that in the lectures he has treated of the aix most important matters, whose development yet forth the chief aspects of Egyptian religion, because the field is a ovast, no complete study could be made in six addresses, or compressed into 270 pages.

The first chapter is devoted to a discussion of the origin of the ancient Egyptians, and the anthor sums up his view on the first part of the subject by giving-the a-his spinion that the original population, so far as any vestige of mankind enable us to counce to a conclusion, was of African origin and was civilised by Asiatic invaders coming from Analia, who had crossed the Red Sea and entered Nubia to the south.

There is also a probability that these divine embleme are alluded to in old cuneiform texts as being placed at the entrance, to Mesopotamian semples; just as they are shown in front of the primitive temple pylona, upon the drawings of the divine processional barques described by Mr. Foncart.
